When Shelley went into her room, there were socks on the floor, socks on the bed, socks on the dresser, socks on the wall, and socks everywhere. "Yikes!" said Shelley. "What a mess."

And from out of the sock drawer somebody yelled,
"BE QUIET."

So Shelley crawled across the floor and very carefully looked into the drawer. A small boy was sitting there reading a book.

Shelley ran downstairs and said, "Mommy, Mommy, there is a boy in my sock drawer."

"Tell him to go home," said the mother.

"And there are socks all over my room."

"Clean them up," said the mother.

"But, but, but ..."

"Clean them up," said the mother.

So Shelley went back upstairs and looked in the drawer. The boy was gone. She cleaned up the whole room and went downstairs for lunch.
